Dr. Nakeshia Williams is the Vice President for Student Success, Well-being and Belonging at Hollins University, a private, historically women's serving, liberal arts university located in the southwestern region of Virginia. She began her career at Hollins University in the inaugural role as Vice President of Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion in 2021. In July 2022, Dr. Williams transitioned to the Vice President of Student Success, Well-being, and Belonging role at the university.

She is responsible for the departments of student life and affairs, student engagement and new student orientation, student programs, campus security, spiritual and religious life, the health and counseling center, academic and student success, Title IX and bias response, and diversity, equity, and inclusion.

Dr. Williams works collaboratively within and across the university with our various stakeholders, including university personnel, students, alumnae/i, board of trustees, and local as well as state community organizations to make significant progress towards building a student-first campus climate.
